Local and General

Monday, September 3rd, is to be recognized as Labour Day.

Mrs. Rickard, of Airdrie, has been visiting Mrs. Ontkes.

Mrs. Young, of Macleod, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. McRory.

We notice J. Treca has purchased a new 40—60 Reeve Separator in preparation for the coming harvest.

Our note last week re gardens in town has brought more gardens to our notice and we are informed that Mrs. Casey has a garden that will take some beating.

The best is the cheapest in the long run, and you can have many a long run in a Saxon "Six."
 Better buy before the advance.
 Thomas Amery, Agent.

Our local School will re-open on Monday next, August 27th, after the summer recess. The pupils did very well at the recent Department Examinations, 15 successful candidates out of 17 is not at all bad, and speaks well for the efficiency of the teaching staff.

Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Thomas left Crossfield on Tuesday afternoon for Drumheller, to pay a visit to Mr. Thomas' parents.

All the pupils from the Crossfield High School who are attending the Normal School at Calgary left on Tuesday afternoon. Quite a number of their young friends were on the platform to bid them adieu.

CHURCH OF THE ASCENSION.
 Services, Sunday, August 26th, 12th Sunday after Trinity.

10 a.m. Sunday School.
 11 a.m. Morning Prayer and Sermon.

Baptisms: August 12th.

 Beatrice Lillian Marion Boyce.

Wedding: August 16th.
 Bert Larabee Croston to Marguerite Masters, both of Bottrel, Alberta.

The annual Sunday School picnic of the Church of the Ascension took place on August 16th, being held at the north-west corner of the Fair Grounds. The weather was delightfully fine for the occasion, and the children, with their parents and friends, to the number of fifty-eight, spent a most enjoyable afternoon. The best thanks of the Sunday School are due to all who contributed in any way whatsoever to the success of the afternoon.

Egg Marketing Service

G. M. Cormie, Alberta representative of the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Government, paid Crossfield and vicinity a visit a few days ago in the interests of the Government Egg Marketing Service.

The Egg Marketing Service has been established by the two departments of agriculture Dominion and Provincial, and offers its services to all farmers in Alberta who have eggs and poultry to market.

At this service station shipments of eggs will be received, candled, graded and sold, and the selling price, less the operating charges returned promptly to the sender. This will enable the farmers to receive the highest market price in cash for their eggs and poultry. The Crossfield U.F.A. store has been provided with egg cases, and anyone who has eggs for sale and wishes to take advantage of the Government service should take their eggs to the U.F.A. store, from which they will be forwarded to the Egg Marketing Service at Calgary.

Cases are supplied free and all transportation charges are paid by the Egg Marketing Service, so that the money that is returned is the net proceeds from the sale of the eggs.

This service is what the farmers of Alberta have long been waiting for and should be much appreciated by the farmers in the vicinity of Crossfield.

Queen Mary Sees a Gas Thrower

During her ten days' stay in France
the Queen practically "saw everything" that is to be seen in the way of methods of dealing with the enemy and treating the wounded.

One day Her Majesty had scarcely stepped out of her car or had time to glance at a country view singularly rich and spacious even for France when just in front of her a gush of the reddish flame wreathed in the blackest smoke hissed out from an ambushed machine. The jet had breadth and volume and speed and reached a great distance, and nothing within its touch could have lived a moment, however well protected. The machine was a trench flame-thrower, a variety of the infernal machine specially recommended by General von Armin, who commanded the enemy on the Somme.

This spectacle was no more than the beginning of the mechanical and chemical terrors presented before the Queen. She saw a bombardment with gas; she saw a projection of flame more vivid than the flame-thrower; and most spectacular—perhaps most useful of all—was a full-dress smoke "barrage."

The Squire's Sweetheart

— BY —

KATHARINE TYNAN

WARD, LOCK & CO., LIMITED
London, Melbourne, and Toronto

One creature had welcomed him eagerly. Dash, the Clumber. It was not in Dash to leap and frisk, he was too staidly for that, but he thrust his muzzle into Hilary's hand and wagged the great bushy feather of his tail with energy.

After tea Hilary went out to call on Mr. Prichard, the dog accompanying him. The Vicar was not at home, so they went on to the New Cottage, where Mrs. Egerton sat before the fire for the first time of the season. Susan beside her on the carpet, playing with a box of building bricks.

Dash walked in before Hilary and licked the child's face, with a friendly air of accepting her as one of his friends.

"Oh, my darling, has he bitten you?" cried Mrs. Egerton, springing up in a great state of agitation, and seizing the child in a tight embrace which made Susan begin to cry.

"I'm so sorry," said Hilary. "Dash never bites anyone. I forgot that you did not like him. We all think such a lot of Dash that we cannot realize, and he cannot, that his friendship could be regarded as anything but an honor."

"Dogs never like me," said Mrs. Egerton, still holding Susan, as though she had caught her up from deadly peril. "I suppose they know I do not like them. Leo adores them and so does Dolly."

"Me too," said Susan, beginning to kick and struggle to get down on the floor to Dash.

"Go down, then, you nasty little thing!" said Mrs. Egerton, putting her down with sudden violence. "She has actually scratched me like a horrid wicked little cat."

Susan went straight to Dash, and took his noble head into her fat arms, while her mother went to bathe her injured hand.

"I think he had better go out," said Hilary, taking Dash by the collar. "He will understand. He is such a gentleman, Susan, that he would not like to cause trouble in a house where he visited."

But Susan stamped at the thought, and showed signs of screaming; so Hilary thought it wise to let her alone, and the pair sat down on the rug before the fire, the dog's head in the child's lap, both perfectly happy.

Hilary's temper was rather soured, and he stood up to go as soon as Mrs. Egerton returned. By this time she had regained her good temper, at least outwardly, and would not hear of his going till her husband had come in, saying that he was only gone to fetch a case from his farmer's that was lying at the station.

Hilary sat down again and allowed himself to be soothed. It was not easy for any man to resist Mrs. Egerton when she had made up her mind to be charming. He had to sit and listen to the latest news. Mrs. Egerton led a dull life by her own choice. The people of the neighborhood had been calling on her in numbers since they had discovered that she was the niece of Lord De Tracy. She complained that they called, since she had no one to bring in the tea, Dolly being gone. "Leo thinks it is no end of fun to fetch in the tray himself and cut great chunks of bread and butter," she said. "I find it a dull joke, and they, being understood, mostly are as much out of it as I am."

"I used to think it was stupid not knowing people," she went on. "Now I think it stupid knowing these wretched county people. They never have anything to say worth listening to. I got enough of them at Birdcot when I was a girl. It makes me laugh when I look at their stupid, self-satisfied faces, to think how surprised they would be if they knew that I found Harry Cooper, the brother of Mrs. Draper, at the shop, more amusing. I used not to tell him. He is rather canny, but of late I have seen rather more of him, and he has proved entertaining."

"Oh, that fellow," said Hilary distastefully.

"You don't like him, of course—I have not yet found the man who did. Some women did, whether they liked it or not. He has cleared out too. Draper has been trying to get rid of him this long while back. He has succeeded at last, though Mrs. Draper looks on him as an injured inn-cent. Of course he's no end of a bad lot really."

Hilary heard her, a faint dislike of her shivering in his breast. He refused to discuss Cooper, and went to other topics. He began to look a little anxiously towards the door, and to wish for Lord Egerton's return. For all her beautiful voice he began to find Mrs. Egerton's conversation rapid when it was not ill-natured or grumbling. She seemed to find it a grievance that Dolly should be married and go to Italy for her honeymoon, while she had the wretched English winter before her.

"Not that Dolly was much of a companion to me," she said, and smiled unpleasantly. "She never forgave me for marrying Leo. When she was not ill-tempered she had a moon-struck air. Did you notice it, Mr. Strangways? She was always half asleep. She used not to be like that. I noticed it first soon after we were settled here. She did not like me to doctress her."

"I only saw that she was uncommonly beautiful," said Hilary almost roughly. "The first time I saw her I was head over ears in love with her. Of course I had to step out to make way for the Squire. It is not likely that any girl would look at me if the Squire cared for her, at least—something thrilled in his voice, which made Mrs. Egerton look at him curiously—

"not many girls would."

"Silverthorne is a lovely old place," said Mrs. Egerton, with a glance from under her eyelids at Hilary.

"Oh, by the way," she went on, "one of my callers—Mrs. De Montmorency—told me that all the ladies here were much exercised at one time about your friendship with that queer South girl. Of course at that time you were looked upon as the Squire's heir. I saw Miss South once. She walked like a man, with great strides, and though she had a pale complexion she had a very wide mouth. She was talking to the pastor as I passed by, and she had a very bold laugh. A bold looking girl I thought her. I am not surprised at the things they say about her."

Hilary flushed. His eyes sent withering lightnings at Mrs. Egerton's unconscious face. He had to lay something of a violent restraint upon himself, for he did not dare to speak lest he might say too much. Mrs. Egerton had drawn her knitting toward her. She was knitting silk ties for her husband—an employment which showed off her long white hands to perfection.

"You know, of course," she said, "that Sir Gilbert is going to divorce his wife. And quite right too. Mrs. De Montmorency told me. She is really rather amusing. They are all bubbling over with it here."

Hilary was thunderstruck. He had been trying to find calm words to answer what Mrs. Egerton had said about Margaret. There was just enough truth in what she had said to make it intolerable. Margaret had a wide mouth; her graceful, free walk had very little in common with the walk of most women; she could run like Atalanta; and when she laughed there was no pretence about it.

Now all that vanished from his mind before the thing Mrs. Egerton had said.

"It is not true," he blurted out sharply. "Mrs. De Montmorency is a malicious, evil-minded woman. Sir Gilbert South has no grounds to divorce his wife. He ill-treated her abominably. He ought to suffer for it. She has undergone a very bad operation lately. She would have died if she had not been taken away in time from her husband's cruelty."

"Oh!" said Mrs. Egerton, looking down at her knitting. "I know nothing, of course, except what Lady Silverthorne and my friends tell me."

What more might have been said was averted by the opportune arrival of Lord Egerton, who greeted Hilary warmly, and was surprised when the young man went away abruptly, refusing an invitation to dinner before Mrs. Egerton could get in her protest: "My dear boy, you 'shoudn't ask first if there is any dinner."

It hardly reached Hilary's consciousness as he went out into the yellow autumn evening. He was at once enraged and frightened at what Mrs. Egerton had said. Of course, there was no truth in it! Those wicked, gossiping women! If there had been, if there could be, why it would kill Lady South! Would Margaret ever hold up her head against it? His poor darling! There had always been something virginal about Margaret. It was, perhaps, the thing which had prevented Hilary's discovering that he was in love with her. He had only realized her as a true woman when, that summer night, amid the sweets of the garden, she had been all softness in his arms.

There was a beautiful golden sky behind the scattered trees of a copse across the common. Hilary, walking towards it, the light in his eyes, rag and fuming inwardly, did not see Mr. Prichard till he knocked up against him.

Cabbage Cigars New War Horror

Venerable jokes about cabbage or lay cigars has become a sad and serious reality in Germany owing to the scarcity and high cost of genuine tobacco.

The latest war substitute within the purview of the government department on substitutes is composed of the above, together with other ingredients like strawberry leaves, elder blossoms and sandalwood to impart aroma.

If salt water is used when washing vegetable greens such as lettuce, spinach, etc., it will effectively drive out small insects that might not otherwise be reached.

A Good Fighter

Hats Must Come Off to Tommy Atkins

H. A. Gwynne, editor of the Morning Post, who has been on a tour of the front, writes:

"Coming along a dusty French road in a motor car, I was delighted to give a Canadian officer a lift. He had been in most of the shows and had started as a private but was now a captain. He was of the right mettle and full of courage and determination to drive the Boche back to his lair. I complimented him on the gallantry which he and his countrymen had shown during the war. 'Sir,' he said, much to my surprise, 'why will you always treat us as children? We have done well, I don't deny it. But everybody has done well. Your Tommy is the finest fighter on God's earth. Isn't he going to get any of the credit? I'm sick to death of the praise that is being plastered all over us. We have done our duty to the best of our ability, but we don't deserve one word more of praise than your fine fighting men.'"

"This sentiment on inquiry I found to be common to all colonial officers. One distinguished Australian officer said he had come to hate the word 'Anzac.' 'We came into the war of our own accord,' he said, 'to beat the Germans. We don't want to be treated as though we should throw up the fight unless we were mentioned every day. We are good, stout fighters, as the Boche knows well, but we take off our hats to the gallant old regiments of the home country.'"

The Wife—You're not economical. The Wife—Well, if you don't call a woman economical who saves her wedding dress for a possible second marriage, I'd like to know what you think economy is.

Germany Offers Coal for Gold

Confirmation has reached the State Department at Washington of the report that Germany has demanded a loan in gold from Switzerland in return for coal. In official circles in Washington this is taken as lending emphasis to the stories of financial difficulties in which Germany finds herself at present.

Germany is in need of gold to meet the obligations which she has incurred with those neutrals with whom she can trade, for German paper money is no longer in favour, and the value of the German mark is depreciating almost to the vanishing point. Switzerland is resisting the demand, and if it is pressed she is in far better shape than Holland or the Scandinavian country to meet aggression from Germany.

The Spirit of The War Widows

Too much prominence is given to the social aspect of some war widows, such as their re-marriage. To understand how the widows of our sailors, for example, accept the fateful message from the Admiralty one would have to live for some time in Chatham or Portsmouth. Recently in the former town, in one home a pale young widow showed her husband's photograph to a friend. "The Admiralty notice of his death," she said "came by the same post as a letter telling me that he expected to be home to-day. It would have been his first leave for nine months. And what pleased him most of all was to think that he should be here for the baby's birthday—the little one will be a year old to-morrow." Lady Callaghan, wife of the admiral of the Port of Chatham, was visiting as many stricken homes as possible. "The spirit of the women," she said, "is splendid. One can think of nothing finer to say than that they are worthy of their husbands."

The Sacrifice of the Poor.

"Among the British poor," says Lord Northcliffe, "who never have enjoyed such wages in their lives before, there is not only no economy, but as I can affirm from personal inspection and that of my reporters, great waste. There is nobody out of work in England; the combined members of many working households are earning as much as $75 or $100 a week. The spectacle may be seen in mining and munition districts of a diet more suited to the Plains in peace time than to a British village in war time."

Excuse me for not coming around and giving you a demonstration with the Saxon "Six," for I have been just a little bit the busiest man around Crossfield for the last five months.

But when it comes to Hills or Mud The Saxon "Six" is the Car you love. Thomas Amery, Agent.

Y.M.C.A. Fund

We have been asked to open a Subscription list on behalf of the Y.M.C.A., and as we recognize the great amount of good that this Association has done on behalf of "Our Boys" we willingly do so. The benefits that have been derived from the huts at the front will never be fully realized. And as all the sources the association have to draw upon are the funds the public supply, we hope that all who are able to help will give something, so how little it may be. Remember the old saw. "Little drops of water."
